I'd like everyone to welcome two new POST advertisers: Modderman Services and Elephant Racing.

Modderman has been providing excellent Porsche services for 42 years. They recently moved to a newer and larger facility right next to Custom Alignment in Mountain View. David Modderman is the second generation owner/technician and welcomes you to check out the new digs. We'll be featuring an article in the coming months and look forward to a Tech Session soon. Stay tuned and check your LPR calendars.

Many of you will recognize Elephant Racing from the great Tech Session we had last year, or from their presence in the autocross and racing communities. Elephant Racing specializes in designing and building performance Porsche suspensions. Chuck Moreland is the owner and chief engineer. In addition to the POST ad, you'll see the Elephant Racing banner displayed at all LPR autocross events this year. With luck, we'll be able to get Chuck out on an autocross course soon.

I'd also like to recognize all our other advertisers whose continued support is greatly appreciated. Whether you're buying parts from the good folks at Parts Heaven, having a seat repaired at Bascom Upholstery, a dent removed at Dell Autobody, getting an oil change at Don's Autowerks, letting Mobile Works West fix your brakes while you're working, getting your new Elephant Racing parts installed at Custom Alignment or having some warranty work done at Porsche of Fremont, please let these nice folks know you're an LPR member and that you saw their ad in the POST. And don't forget our special member advertisers, Emilie Highley and Tom Provasi. Emilie will be happy to help you with your real estate needs and Tom can help with your painting requirements.

Now I'm going to venture into dangerous territory. I want to hear your opinions on the POST. Whether it's the cost, the number of photos, my rants, whatever. This is frequently a hot topic at Board meetings and I'm well aware of the opinions of those in regular attendance. But there are hundreds of you out there we don't hear from. Are you reading it on line or in print? Do you like it? Want to see something included. Want me to stop ranting? We'd also like to have new members submit articles or volunteer to write up LPR events. It's not hard or time consuming. Hey, if I can do it, anyone can. Let me know what's on your mind. I'd prefer emails so I can aggregate responses but call if you like (9 - 6 bus. hours please).

As long as I'm thrashing around in the deep end of the pool, I should mention that I'm thinking of holding a few Board meetings in the Santa Cruz area. We have lots of members in the area and I'd like to make it easier for them to participate.

Because of the traffic, it will probably be on a Saturday or Sunday with a social hour preceding the meeting. If anyone has suggestions on where we could hold a meeting for 25 to 40 people, let me know.

That's my rant for February. Thanks for listening. Peter

POST Positions

Kevin Bennett, Editor

I saw a recent news story about the San Mateo County Community College District. The gist was that a community college (junior college then) education was once tuition free in the State of California, there is a push, coming out of Sacramento, to return to those halcyon days, and that in San Mateo County, thanks to its stellar property tax revenues, 19,000 of the 33,000 county-resident students who attend the county's three community colleges pay no tuition. When asked about expanding the tuition waiver to all San Mateo County residents, Chancellor Ron Galatolo, who heads the system, agreed that such would a laudable goal, but that he was concerned that many of the students receiving free tuition still had to deal with the cost of books, transportation and miscellaneous fees. He then went on to talk about how K-12 schools have government meals programs and when disadvantaged students enroll in community college that benefit goes away.

There is a term that has come into vogue in the last few years; "Nanny State". It applies specifically to government limiting choice to individuals, not for their immediate safety, but for what the state has decided is for their own good. Examples would be limitations on smoking, online gambling and recent movements to increase the cost and limit the size of sugary drinks. What Chancellor Galatolo seems to be advocating is a another form of government overreach, what, in this case, I would christen "The Mommy State."

With rare exception, the students attending community college are legal adults. When you reach the age of eighteen you can vote and enter into contracts. Many states allow drinking and gambling at that age. Why, just because you are pursuing more education, should the school system be relieving you of minimal responsibility for adult life? It's jarring enough to have to take on all of the responsibilities of adulthood after high school, but the idea that you should be insulated from having to provide your own sustenance while attending college just strikes me as wrong. It's no wonder that I hear stories of the whining graduates who are so disillusioned about their inability to find their dream job after graduation. They're having their hands held and their little rear ends powdered for them for 20 to 25 years and then, suddenly, they have to take responsibility for themselves? I'd probably whine, too.

Galatolo is overreaching. His responsibility as chancellor is to provide education. His $160 million a year budget should be spent on just that, education. Instead, he is considering spending a portion of his budget on welfare for the 19,000 students whom he favors over the rest of the student body. It is a choice that I feel is beyond his purview but is typical of the push of ambitious bureaucrats with large budgets, coupled with insufficient supervision and accountability, to empower themselves and their agency under the guise of good intentions.

Gift Exchange with Jim & Jen

by Kris Vanacore

“Twas a week before Christmas and all through their house, no one was resting - not Jennifer or her spouse.”

On Sunday, Dec. 18th Jennifer and Jim Bryant opened their home for one of LPR’s iconic Good Time Gatherings, The Christmas Gift Exchange. 26 attendees, including new members Janelle and Robert Mann (plus Janelle’s Mom, Bonnie) joined in to share the holiday spirit and some spirits! Appetizers and Desserts were brought to share and Emilie Highley made some “slammin” egg nog. Before anyone could get too slammed, Jim started us on the Gift Exchange, explaining the rules and handing out numbers to those who were participating. The gifts were to be of a $15-$20 value and I must say, many were very creative, some kind of suggestive - or maybe that was just the egg nog speaking- and some were just plain funny. One never knows what to expect from this crowd. Laughter abounded as gifts were

Kill-A-Kone Charity Donation

by Kris Vanacore

On Friday, Jan. 6, a group of LPR members navigated my sketchy directions to the soon-to-be first ever permanent home of the Morgan Autism Center, aka “The Dream Campus”. Several members spent a few minutes sightseeing this part of the Willow Glen as they attempted to locate the site. Lucky for us, Brad Boardman, director of the center, realized our dilemma and came running out to the street, waving us in.

Attendees included Anne Roth, Dave and Sheila Dunwoodie, John and Angie Reed, Kathy, Johnny and Johnny3 Musser, Emilie Highley, Karen Morgan, Peter Ridgeway and Tony and me. Brad (also an LPR member and Auto-cross star) with an assist from his contractor, Bill, guided us through a tour of the facility.

Kris Vanacore, Sheila Dunwoodie, Angie Reed and a wonderful world.

For those of you who are not aware, the Morgan Autism Center, founded 40+ years ago, has both child and adult programs. They are a non-profit and rely solely on fund raising, donations and some state and federal grants. For more information, go to their website: <http://www.morgancenter.org/>

Remarkably, in June, Morgan Autism Center closed escrow on its first permanent home. They immediately began a full court press to get the safety upgrades needed; upgrades such as lead and asbestos abatement, creating fire safe corridors, installing sprinklers, bathroom improvements and outdoor modifications to meet ADA requirements. As Brad and Bill walked us through the work in progress they painted a beautiful picture of what was to come and we were impressed!

Everywhere we looked we could see (almost like Disney magic) how the hopes and dreams of these dedicated individuals and many others in the community, through donations of both time, money and materials, will help transform the site into exactly what the Center needs to support its clients. They are working towards relocating to their new home by the end of February.

After wandering through the inside of the building our tour was moved outdoors to what must have totally clinched the deal that the former St. Elizabeths Day Home was THE DREAM CAMPUS. Outdoor play areas abounded but I think the kicker was a tricycle race track. It became apparent that this location was perfect for Morgan's clients; quiet, somewhat isolated with ample outdoor space to play and let off steam (clients and staff). What a blessing!!

Following the official hand off of the final charity contribution check $1375.00 bringing the total Kill-A-Kones Charity donation to $4700.00, many of the club members headed off to have lunch together.

By Kevin Bennett

On January 18th, Debbie and I, accompanied by Hal & Diana Hallock, and in the face of projected storms, headed out on a pre-run of our planned tour in April. We had already postponed this first experiment due to rain and felt that we needed to execute our plan, this time, despite predictions of foul weather.

Because of the wet, I was driving at my stodgiest, but alas, my obstacle avoidance was not up to snuff, as I apparently hit a sharp stone in the road and blew out the right front tire. We both commented on the noise, but it was Hal, certainly more attuned to things automotive than yours truly, who recommended we stop to see if we had a flat, with the above reveal. So, in the rain, the project was undertaken, and yes, completed... damply.

We were in the middle of nowhere with no cell service. Only one car passed during the changeout and, indicative of the neighborliness of the area, they stopped to offer help.

The help was politely refused and Hal and I undertook the initial challenge of figuring out how to get the damn jack out of its cubbyhole, lowering the spare tire from under the car, and then getting the front end high enough to accommodate the jack under the axle.

Save the date
April 22

Diana managed to find what was probably the flattest rock in Stanislaus County and we rolled the flat tire up on it to get enough clearance to get the jack to fit in place. Once that obstacle was overcome, it was just standard tire changing procedure, albeit in the rain. Diana had two umbrellas and did double duty, attempting to keep herself and me as dry as possible during this endeavor.

To Debbie's chagrin, I elected to put the damaged tire in the car, rather than stowed underneath... I wanted to get out of the rain and mud.

Needless to say, we were extremely late for the appointment with our contact at the tour's destination, but Hallocks and I were wearing our club jackets and she just ran into us as we walked in the door. Meeting held and job accomplished.

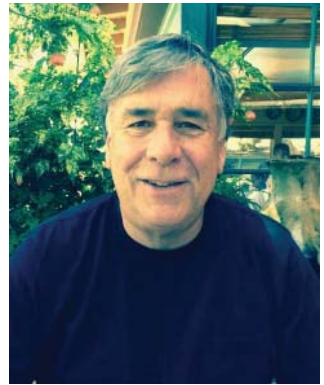

I hope it doesn't rain in April!

Vintage Porsche Event Calendar

Provided by Steve Douglas

If you happen to be interested in the historical side of Porsche, here are a few events that should be on your list for 2017. “Vintage Porsche” is basically air-cooled, pre-1999, which covers 356, 911/912, 914, and the race cars 550 to 962. These events can provide a wealth of knowledge of Porsche History: the Cars, the People, and the Memorabilia.

Time to Start Planning to Attend

March 2-5 is the L.A. Weekend, and if you have the stamina, there will be an overload of things to do, all vintage Porsche related.

Starting off with two days of “open houses”, restoration shops, dealers, parts suppliers and others. They range North (Sierra Madre’s warehouse in Burbank) to South (California Porsche Restoration’s shop in Fallbrook). In between there are about 12 other shops to visit, plus some special invites that have yet to be listed. Most try and make the 11-2 lunch at John Willhoits in Long Beach, BBQ Brats. If that isn’t enough there is the Peterson Museum, and new Porsche Experience in Carson.

Saturday morning at the LAX Hilton is the Literature and Toy Show, which is much more than paper and toys, with over 200 vendors, and over 2000 “buyers”, it is a huge social scene, along with the biggest selection of vintage Porsche anywhere. Parts vendors, collectables, clothing, accessories and just about anything else shows up.

Saturday afternoon, things shift to Costa Mesa, Jim Liberty’s “hobby shop”, Bill Doyle and Steve Schmidt’s 4-Cam Carrera shop and an evening party at European Collectables, all within 3 blocks of each other.

Sunday is the all Porsche Swap Meet and Show in Anaheim.
